

CZECHOSLOVAKIA: DISSENT AND REFORM

Vladimir V. Kusin

This article seeks to distinguish the different types of critical and oppositional attitudes in Czechoslovakia from one another in order to inaugurate a discussion of questions of terminology in the analysis of political systems and developments in the Communist governed states of Eastern Europe. The author attempts to follow up his typology in the developments of the last decade and also to place it in relation to the new reformist tendencies of Gorbachov.